Synopsis: To stop coronavirus, listen!

The pandemic can be stopped. We already know how, explain two of the world's top public health doctors in this episode on lessons from the pandemic. The solution involves truly understanding how the disease was stopped in the early countries that confronted it. "We're going back and relearning a lot of the lessons from China," said Dr. Bruce Aylward, who led the World Health Organization's mission to China and is working to share those findings in Italy and other countries. Dr. Aylward says leader's in the West were slow to listen to the lessons. "We are all human at a certain level and we tend to cherry pick that part of the information, which we find most reassuring," he observed. Dr. David Nabarro, WHO Director-General's Special Envoy on Covid-19, said that quick action will contain the virus. "If when a case arrives, you prevaricate, you're half-hearted, you pretend it's not real and you wait perhaps two, three, four weeks before you start to implement measures of any kind," he warned, "what happens is that it basically doubles in scale every two to three days."

Following the lead of Drs. Nabarro and Aylward, Co hosts Edie Lush and Claudia Romo Edelman share their plan to offer regular episodes of the podcast that detail success in attacking the pandemic and share them widely while the lessons can make a difference.
